

Trusted Contact Person Information and Consent

Recent changes to regulations to protect vulnerable clients¹ against financial exploitation² require that we ask you for the name and contact information for one or more person(s) that you trust (a Trusted Contact Person or TCP) to assist us in protecting your investments. We could contact this person to confirm or make inquiries about any of the following:

- Possible financial exploitation affecting you or your account(s)
- Your current contact information
- Concerns about your mental capacity as it relates to financial decision making
- The name and contact information of any legal guardian, executor, trustee or other personal or legal representative you may have

The vast majority of Canadians support the idea of appointing a trusted contact person to help protect their money.

You are encouraged to name as your TCP one or more individuals who you trust, are mature and have the ability to communicate and engage in potentially difficult conversations with your account executive and other representatives of our firm about your personal situation. You are also encouraged to name as your Trusted Contact Person an individual that is not involved in making decisions for your accounts (examples of such persons who may have authority to make decisions are joint account holders or those you have given a power of attorney to).

Your Trusted Contact Person may be asked to assist your account executive and our firm in protecting your investment accounts. They may be asked questions about you such as, for example, if your account executive or other representatives of our firm have concerns that you may be experiencing financial exploitation or diminished mental capacity.

As someone you trust, your TCP may know more about your personal situation, your family dynamic or health information than your account executive and other representatives of our firm and they may be asked to help protect your accounts if there is an emergency.

A Trusted Contact Person cannot make financial decisions or account changes by virtue of being named as your TCP. An individual named as a Trusted Contact Person is not, by virtue of being named as your TCP, your legal representative, guardian or trustee.
